Conducting Research into a topic "The Death Penalty" using an "electronic environment"

Synopsis of the Data Display Demonstration.

The modern researcher has a vast range of electronic tools at his disposal. He can compile bibliographies (in this case by searching the catalogues of over 70 libraries). He can obtain and search such libraries, requesting and retrieving the appropriate data. He can copy over appropriate files from local and national databases and archives: materials from the Wellington Papers (housed in the Southampton University Library) will be featured. He can write up and present the results of his research - all from the workstation in his office.

The presentation will mimic this process using "IBM Storyboard" simulations "captured" in the course of a recent research project.
